PREFACE

This biographical dictionary is a state-wide compilation.

As such it would be but typical of many of its kind, had not marked compilative distinctiveness been brought to it by an augmentation, accomplished through integration of selected biographees, sufficient to provide an encompassment of areas contiguous to the designated state, or otherwise appropriate under contemporary and accepted concepts of American regionalism.

Therefore, while it remains a state-wide compilation, the consultant will not find it entirely restricted to such drastic limitations as one locality's arbitrary boundary must inevitably impose. In short, to the user it takes on the added effectiveness of exceptional scope, while to its biographees it completely retains identification with the specific state.

This distinctive betterment, which has been accomplished without placing any additional charge upon subscribers, is responsive to the all but obvious reasons involving reference usefulness, and as well to the gratifying interest evidenced in the compilation throughout the course of its preparation. This interest has in many instances reflected definite indications that enquiries reaching our community libraries and specialized reference centers today consistently call for biographical data about a larger proportion of the outstanding men and women outstanding regionally, if not also nationally, in their localities than could be included in a work national in scope yet useable in size.

This concern of consultants of biographical compilations with localized and regional coverage is, as a matter of fact, entirely logical. The national work necessarily limits itself to individuals happening to be of actual or probable reference interest throughout the country. There are, however, within a nation as extended geographically, and as developed in all the phases of modern life, as ours, actually the equivalents of at least five important "countries" — indeed, some capable authorities would consider six, seven, or even eight, the more accurate denominator for making such a subdivision. However, none would dispute that the areas encompassed herein lie in these great "lands" within a greater nation.

It follows that within each of these great subdivisions there are men and women so outstanding in respect to the life and times of these countries-within-a-nation as to be subject to a degree of reference enquiry more marked than the corresponding nation-wide interest of but a few short decades ago, when appropriate allowance is made for the tremendous growth of America. "The Northwest", "The Pacific Coast", "The South and the Southwest", "The Central States", and "The East" are each today the equivalent of the entire country when the standard national biographical directory first appeared — not alone in point of biographical reference interest, but in many other respects as well.

Thus there arises the clearly defined reference need for, and the useful reference field of, the logically delimited regional biographical work. The need for, and field of, the standard national reference work is not in the slightest measure lessened thereby. In recognition of this obvious fact, some among those primarily of national interest, although resident in the areas covered by this work, have not been listed, as data regarding them are available in the standard national work to be found in all libraries and reference centers.

It is worth also noting that the marked advantages inherent in the augmentation of scope mentioned above, have been obtained without reducing the facility with which the consultant can use the amplified compilation. This has been accomplished by means of a variation from what is still the arrangement usually applied to biographical dictionaries, and one selected as peculiarly fitted to the requirements of this compilation.

It has become habitual to arrange biographical compilations alphabetically — in other words, to make them "self indexing". This is undoubtedly accounted for by the fact that the early compilations consisted of a very limited number of biographies, or were merely lists of names not accompanied by biographies.

The "self indexing" arrangement, while convenient for such compilations, is actually cumbersome when applied to a grouping of any size and consisting of biographies. The biographies, even when laboriously condensed, are of sufficient length to result in so few names coming "under the eye" when a search is being made for a particular biographee's name — which is practically without exception the objective when such a compilation is put to use — that this quest consumes considerable unnecessary time. Page after page must often be turned before the desired name is located.

Furthermore, the close alphabetization necessary in a self-indexing arrangement that is completely effective is exceedingly difficult to achieve in practice. Any name that is not exactly in sequence under the more or less arbitrary usages which the compilers elect to follow, is probably entirely "lost" to some consulting the compilation, for so few names are "under the eye" simultaneously that a name not found at once is not readily noticed elsewhere. Even a name correctly placed under the compilers' preferences in arrangment — for example, is "St." for "Saint", treated as "Sa" or "St."? — may be quite lost to the hurried consultant of the compilation.

If, however, the biographees' names alone are separately arranged alphabetically — as a distinct index, in other words — a greatly increased number of names come "under the eye" simultaneously, and the quest for the desired name is markedly shortened, while the unfamiliarly placed name will very probably be seen as a result of "being under the eye" at the critical moment.

Then the particular page containing the desired biography can be turned to directly — since it will be specified directly opposite the name sought — without a number of pages having to be searched through until the correct one is finally found, "Dictionary style" repetitions — in the top corners of pages — of the first and last names appearing on a page, may improve the "self-indexing" arrangement, but comparatively few consultants of biographical compilations utilize them, it has been found, and the fact that there are normally only a limited number of biographies on a page make them far less useful than in the case of a word dictionary.

Therefore on both the above scores a separate alphabetical index of biographees' names facilitates. Additionally, it makes possible overcoming one of the principal compilative problems encountered under the "self-indexing" arrangement — the addendum required to care for biographies accumulating after the "self-indexing" compilation has been assembled. All the biographies to be compiled cannot be in hand at the moment the compilation is put into a "self-indexing" sequence — unless of course the compilation is to be non-current at publication — for many time-making production steps necessarily follow before the completed work can be distributed in book form.

An addendum is therefore resorted to, and biographies coming to hand following the completion of the "self-indexing" arrangement of the compilation are relegated to it. But — and here is the difficulty — the addendum is usually entirely overlooked by those consulting the completed book. As a result biographees listed in the addendum are frequently to all intents and purposes practically not in the compilation at all — and to that important extent the compilation becomes ineffective.

With all these factors in mind, this compilation carries a separate index of biographees' names alone, with the pages involved indicated in each instance. This procedure has made possible including in the basic compilation all biographies in hand up to the time of actually going to press, since under it there is no necessity to arrange the biographies in alphabetical sequence. An addendum was not required, furthermore — and as well the other important advantages mentioned above have been gained. It is the confident expectation of the editors that this constructive change from what has been the habitual practice will be found most satisfactory in actual use, and as well that it will increase the serviceability of the compilation markedly.

For the building of this new volume every proper source of available names has been drawn upon, and every reasonable effort has been made to procure the requisite data from persons deemed eligible for inclusion in keeping with the discriminating standard fixed for admission. Nevertheless, names which should have been included are missing; but in almost every instance the omission is not due to inadvertence or lack of effort on the part of those responsible for the preparation of material for the book.

As a rule, such omissions are the result of failure on the part of the persons invited to provide the necessary facts. However, the great majority of such invitations were promptly accepted, and other helpful cooperative courtesies were freely extended. For these grateful thanks are hereby extended.

Notwithstanding the impediments and handicaps encountered during its production, many of them accentuated by war-brought difficulties which could not be escaped, this volume may lay just claim to providing a useful record of outstanding living men and women of an exceedingly important section of the country — a section whose economic, civic, social and other interests, if not identical, are nevertheless closely related.

To make dependable a compilation such as this it is necessary that it should be impartial, and inclusion in it unpurchasable. Space in this book has in no instance been purchased — with either a monetary remuneration or any other consideration of whatsoever nature — and every effort has been made to realize impartiality.

For obvious reasons, the publishers here, in as prominent a manner as they have at their disposal, publicize that the title of this volume — used, as its typographical arrangement indicates, to specify sectional geographic range of content — is to be construed in its entirety, and no portion as, separately, connoting either national scope or the standard American biographical reference work.

With a view to revisions, as time and necessity make them advisable, suggestions for improvement, changes in biographical data, notices of deaths, and change of address as they occur, are invited.

INDEX

TO THE PAGINATION OF BIOGRAPHEES' SKETCHES

This method of indexing the biographical data of each biographee appearing in the following compilation has been utilized because of the resultant facilitation of reference use of the work, as detailed in the preceding preface. Inclusion in the compilation has solely and entirely resulted from the editors' application of selective standards intended to reflect distinction in meritorious attainment sufficiently distinguished to subject the biographee to more than localized reference interest. No other consideration of any nature whatsoever was determinative.

This index repeats biographees' names as in the first lines of their sketches, the manuscripts for which were sent to them for personal checking during compilation — thus marital status and/or titles are not listed unless so appearing.

Table of Abbreviations 30

Biographies 33

TABLE OF ABBREVIATIONS

Observant users of this work, on referring to the table below in the course of utilizing biographies in the compilation, will doubtless hav noted with appreciation that the inner columns of pages either followed or preceded by a considerable portion of the book's bulk are unusuall convenient to consult. This is because exceptionally wide inner margins have been provided in order to reduce the inconvenient bending the inner column on a page when overlaying a considerable portion of an opened book the principal content of which is necessaril arranged in columns.

In interpreting by means of this table the abbreviations appearing in biographee's sketches, it is necessary in some instances, because of similarities, to note carefully exact letter-sequence. For example, service in the army during the last war is designated by "A.U.S.", to indicate the legislative designation for that particular force, "The Army of the United States"; while "N.A." records membership in the "National Army", which participated in the first World War under that official designation (the permanent ranks in the regular standing army being followed by "U.S. Army").

* Listings followed by this indicator are of biographees who failed to supply current data requested because of editorial file inadequacies or errancies.

BIOGRAPHIES

The consultant's attention is directed to the notation above the first entry in the index to the pagination of biographees' sketches which ends opposite this page. The method for referring to a specific biographee's data which the index implements has been utilized, as mentioned in that notation and detailed in the preface to this work, because of certain resultant advantages to both the user and the compiler of a biographic dictionary. Its principal physical differentiation from the still prevalent practice of self-indexing such compilations is that a compact, separate index, instead of the bulky compilation itself, facilitates reference to individual biographies. Accordingly, the index mentioned is to be turned to when referring to a specific biography in the following compilation.
